International airlines including Delta have partnerships with Skywest Airlines which is a leading regional airline that primarily serves the West Coast. Gradual growth through the years has led to the airline serving a great number of passengers daily that began in 1972 as a small airline in Utah. Now, let's discuss some cool things about Skywest Airlines.

Delta Airlines, which most of us are well acquainted with, is one of the more large airlines that Skywest deals with. This history of Delta dates all the way back to the 1920s and the earliest days of aviation. Over the years, Delta has grown to be one of the largest airlines in the world. The truth is, when looking at how many excursionists they carry, Delta takes second only to United Airlines who is an associate to Skywest as well. For passengers that have to have flights into smaller airports, bigger airlines such as Delta found that they need the assistance of more petite local carriers so they can help more people. Consequently, providing assistance to air travelers and one another is something Skywest and Delta are able to do.

Alaska Airlines is the most current airline that has been added to the Skywest Airlines group. This means more flights to destinations such as Seattle, Portland, Fresno and Santa Barbara. This alliance between the two airlines took place in May of 2011. Alaska Airlines, aside from offering a convenient connection between Alaska and West Coast cities is a diverse airline that offers, among other things, vacation packages to various spots in Canada, Mexico and Hawaii. The addition of Alaska Airlines brings the partner total for Skywest to five. This extremely enhances a traveler's choice of finding convenient flights on the regional airlines when planning a trip.
